Standout combination:PHEV running gear, air suspension, Drive Pro Pack, Matrix LED lighting, surround camera support and premium Ebony trim give this Range Rover Sport a strong blend of capability, comfort and resale appeal.

OWNERSHIP VIEW

This configuration should be judged on hybrid-system health, suspension behaviour, premium electronics, cosmetic condition and the correct operation of its assistance systems.

PHEV system checks matter

For this configuration, inspection should include the high-voltage battery, charging socket, Mode 2 and Mode 3 cables, coolant loops and electric auxiliary systems. A clean charging history and correct hybrid operation protect the car's value.

Air suspension is a key cost area

The four-corner air suspension and continuous damping are central to the drive quality. Check ride height consistency, compressor behaviour, warning messages and any corner that drops after parking.

Luxury electronics need full function testing

The Drive Pro Pack, surround cameras, head-up display, TFT cluster, connected navigation and telematics should all be tested. Small faults in camera, radar or infotainment systems can be expensive and reduce the premium feel.

Wheels and tyres influence comfort

The 21-inch gloss black wheels look excellent, but rim damage, uneven wear and tyre quality should be checked carefully. The specified Pirelli all-season tyre setup is a relevant resale and road-comfort factor.

Export profile is LHD-friendly

This is a left-hand-drive EU6D petrol PHEV with European navigation data and French owner documentation. It is naturally more attractive for continental European markets than right-hand-drive regions.

Black exterior trim needs condition attention

Gloss black trim, the black grille, black mirror finish and gloss black wheels give the car its visual identity. Scratches, staining and poor previous repairs are easy to spot on this specification.

Ownership focus: this is a left-hand-drive Range Rover Sport HSE Dynamic PHEV with Storm Grey paint, Ebony interior, Drive Pro Pack, premium audio, air suspension and a strong European-market equipment profile.
